Aims and Ethics of the Newfoundland and Labrador Archaeological Society

Members of the Newfoundland and Labrador Archaeological Society agree to promote the advancement of archaeology by supporting the organization in its aims to stimulate the interest of the general public in archaeology and to discuss and disseminate archaeological information and ideas according to the NLAS's ethical principles. This includes:

- Supporting the permitted identification, recording, protection and effective management of archaeological materials, collections, and established or suspected archaeological sites in Newfoundland and Labrador;
- Respecting archaeological objects of all societies and acknowledging their scientific, educational, and cultural significance;
- Discouraging the sale of, or the placing of commercial value on any said object;
- Acting in accordance with the applicable provincial and federal heritage legislation; and,
- Sharing any archaeological finds in possession with interested community members, organizations, elders, and archaeologists.
